Either

1 Read carefully the following poem. The poet observes men who are bodybuilding at the gym.

How does the poet strikingly portray the men at the gym?

To help you answer this question, you might consider:

- how he portrays what the men look like
- the words and images which convey what seems to be happening
- how the poet conveys his thoughts and feelings about the men.

the men are weeping in the gym

The men are weeping in the gym using the hand dryer to cover their sobs their hearts have grown too big for their chests their chests have grown too big for their shirts they are dressed like kids who have forgotten their games kit they are crying in the toilet and because they have built themselves as statues this must mean that God has entered them they are wringing their faces like sweat towels in the sink their veins are about to burst their banks they are flooding out of themselves onto the tiles they have turned water into protein shakes they have got too close to the mirrors they have got too close to the glass and now they are laying in the broken pools of their own faces the lines of them! At the decline press the bicep curl[1] waiting staring straight ahead swearing that the wetness on their cheeks is perspiration that the words they mutter as they lift are meaningless that they feel nothing when the muscle tears itself from itself that they don't hear the thousands of tiny fracturings needed to build something stronger

Or

2 Read carefully the following extract from a novel. The narrator is a teenage girl who lives with her parents ('M' is her mother). Recently she has experienced a series of particularly vivid dreams. She recounts how she went to her bedroom and saw someone who looked exactly like herself apparently asleep in her bed.

How does the narrator portray this unsettling experience?

To help you answer this question, you might consider:

- how she recognised the body in the bed
- how she describes what she did next
- her thoughts and feelings about what has happened.

My duvet which by daylight had a pattern of stretching cats – M's choice not mine – was a shadow mass.

And if it was a dream, it wouldn't have been so very, very long.
